Showing results 1-30 of 36 Offering a delicious dive into Jewish culinary traditions, kosher dining is rooted in the kosher dietary laws of the religion. With origins in ancient communities, the term quite literally means 'clean' or 'lawful' - originating from the Hebrew word kosher - to ensure food is prepared with strict guidelines around ingredients and preparation methods. Today, the city's kosher offerings are concentrated in West London, and range from classic Baker Street delis that serve melt-in-the-mouth sandwiches to pizza with a Middle Eastern flair at Golders Green. Blending history with vibrant flavours from around the world, these are the best kosher restaurants in London... perfect if you crave authentic comfort food with flair. For Traditional K kosher Food Tish With soft jazz providing the soundtrack to feasts of chargrilled rib eye, veal cutlets and mushroom linguine, it's no wonder Tish is one of the best kosher restaurants in London. Located in the heart of Belsize Park, it offers a charming escape among the surrounding greenery. Branchchild of businessman and restaurateur David Levin, Tish was opened as a place where the Jewish community can eat together on Shabbat. Our top tip? Make sure to save room for the challah pudding that's smothered in a moreish whiskey ice cream. Alfresco dining doesn't get better than this. Pita A gem on Golders Green Road (there are quite a few here), Pita is home to some of the finest Middle Eastern street eats in the area. Chow down on moreish hummus topped with minced beef, roasted pine kernels and parsley or opt for Jerusalem ribeye steak strips complimented by a secret spice mix. As for plant-based options, there's also vegan falafel and crispy cauliflower to enjoy. Pita also screens live sports while you eat and drink. Reubens Note: Reubens is temporarily closed, however you can visit new sister site Reubens Cafe & Bakery nearby at 52 Baker Street. Reubens is a beloved institution in London's Jewish food scene, having first opened its doors in 1973. Situated on Baker Street, this classic kosher deli has been serving traditional comfort food for decades, becoming a go-to spot for both locals and tourists alike. Best known for the legendary salt beef sandwiches - piled high with tender, perfectly seasoned beef on fresh rye bread, and served with pickles and mustard - the Baker Street deli has got to be one of the best kosher restaurants in Central London. The menu also features timeless favorites like matzo ball soup, latkes, and hearty portions of schmitzel. Meet our favourite kosher restaurant in the West End for authentic salt beef sandwiches. Delicatessen Situated on Rosslyn Hill, Delicatessen specialises in modern Middle Eastern eats. Easily making our list of the top 10 kosher restaurants London has to offer, the Hampstead spot is a favourite among locals for its stellar selection of veggie and meaty options. You'll be met by wine bottles stacked on high shelves and an interior filled with industrial features. As for the highly anticipated food? Think aubergine carpaccio with raw tahini, date molasses, pistachio and pomegranate, or a mighty whole duck breast elevated with Jerusalem artichoke texture and a side of confit carrots. Look no further for kosher restaurants in Hampstead. For K kosher Dining With A Twist Hummus Bar If it's budget-friendly dining you're after then Hummus Bar should be on your radar. Located in Golders Green and Hendon, they're home to a 'bunch' menu (lunch in a bun) for £12.75, alongside a starter and a main for £19.25. Expect a chilled out setting, with alfresco seating and a buzzing atmosphere. If your idea of a good night includes cold beers and Moroccan cigars, then you've come to the right place. Hummus is another kosher restaurant with multiple locations. Pizaza When it comes to kosher restaurants, Golders Green is a hotspot. Cue Pizaza; known for combining old-school standards with a contemporary twist on pizza and Italian-inspired dishes. Since opening in 2004, Pizaza has become a favorite thanks to its fun and casual dining experience that's perfect for families and groups. Signature pizzas include the Pizaza Special - loaded with a mix of vegetables, olives, and their homemade tomato sauce, as well as an indulgent Mexican fajita pizza, packed with spicy chicken and guacamole. This is not your usual kosher food in London. SOYO With venues in Golders Green and Edgware, SOYO has earned quite a reputation across the city. It's all about breakfast and brunch, with bagels, crepes, sandwiches and soups reigning supreme. Whether you starting your morning with a tropical smoothie made from mango and lychee or try a Moroccan salad covered in toasted almonds, these destinations have a range of Mediterranean options. After something sweet? Build your own froyo from a selection of toppings. It's no wonder this is one of our top picks of kosher restaurants in Edgware. Met Su Yan With two pan-Asian restaurant in the heart of Golders Green and Edgware, Met Su Yan is ideal for all occasions. Choose from takeaway or dine in, with a laid-back space that can be hired for special events. Food comes in the form of favourites from Chinese sweet and sour chicken to Japanese teriyaki and Malaysian lamb curry; all paired with kosher wines and Champagnes. Met San Yu offers Asian food with a kosher twist. The Kanteen For those of you after kosher dairy restaurants in London, The Kanteen serves a range of delicious vegetarian plates prepared under strict kosher. If you're local to Brent Cross, then you're really in for a treat. Feast on the iconic eggs bagel/dict florentine topped with spinach, hollandaise and chives for brunch, or go for Thai stir fry and slices of pizza come dinnertime. You can see why this is a Brent Cross favourite. Novellino Serving breakfast, lunch and dinner, Novellino is a reliable hub to fill up on the good stuff. With two restaurants in Golders Green (the OG Novellino, plus a bistro specialising in meat) they have been going strong since 2005. With the exception of the Sabbath and Jewish festivals, Novellino is open daily for breakfast, lunch and dinner, cooking everything from burnt aubergine and tuna steak to sushi, pizza and pasta. For a private experience, book your own dining room. The Novellino team are so popular that they've also spread to Brighton, offering shabbat meal deliveries.
