The parents' guide to what's in this movie. Sex, Romance & Nudity Not present Drinking, Drugs & Smoking Parents need to know that Asterix: The Mansions of the Gods is an animated French feature based on the popular Belgian-French character Asterix, who is from comic books originally published in 1959. As the comics explain, the action takes place in 50 B.C., when ancient Gaul is occupied by the Romans, except for one small village that refuses to cave to the conquerors. Asterix, Gaul warrior, is the heart of the village's rebellion, infuriating Roman emperor Julius Caesar, who schemes to conquer them by different methods and tricks. Much of the humor depends on rampant cartoon violence and sophisticated speech by unlikely characters, like soldiers and Roman slaves. Language includes "cray" and "butt." A boy and old man are captured by the Romans and thrown in a cage. A Gaul is tied in chains and thrown in a dungeon. One Gaul prone to tossing Roman into the air notes, "I like Romans without armor. They make a nice sound when they hit the ground." The Gauls imbibe a magic potion that gives them superhuman strength to battle the Romans. There aren't any reviews yet. Be the first to review this title. ASTERIX: THE MANSIONS OF THE GODS presents a Roman emperor Julius Caesar who is often whiny and sometimes maniacal and sometimes diabolical (his advisers can't make up their minds). He's bent on conquering the last hold-out village in Gaul, part of the Western European area he had conquered during his ancient reign. Asterix, a small but feisty Gaul warrior, is at the heart of the village's rebellion, goading Caesar to keep turning to stranger and stranger methods to eradicate the rebels. This time he orders the construction of luxury apartments in the middle of the Gaul's forested turf. He then sends Romans, whether they like it or not, to live there and outnumber the stubborn Gauls. The Gauls, who love nothing more than a big fight, and especially a fight with Romans, are corralled by Asterix, who advises them to use force only when necessary and never on civilians. When that necessity arises, he gulps down a magic potion designed by the village's Druid priest, Getafix, to imbue him with superhuman strength. Roman warriors are scared of Asterix and his best friend, the hulking, super-strong Obelix, and often surrender or retreat rather than battle. Much of the humor depends on rampant cartoon violence and sophisticated speech by unlikely characters, such as soldiers and Roman slaves. This funny French animated movie is entertaining for kids who are comfortable reading subtitles. The English subtitles rapidly streak across the screen in Asterix: The Mansions of the Gods as Gauls make clever quips in French, which means that kids young enough to enjoy this most might have a difficult time keeping up with the reading. The animation quality is good though unremarkable, but the notion that small, ill-equipped ancient rebels can use their wiles and a magic potion to continue to thwart the juggernaut Roman army will probably delight little kids. Some of the vocabulary will be over the heads of younger kids but will entertain the grown-ups watching along with them. A Roman slave is clearly far more intelligent than the soldiers ordering him around, and he manages to negotiate freedom through the use of politeness and flowery language, which others use as well. "figuratively," "avaricious," "eradicated," "invincible," and "indomitable." Roman soldiers catch the contagion and start requiring that their general ask them nicely when the time comes to attack the enemy. "Be so kind as to fire." Families can talk about cartoon violence. How do we know we can laugh at it instead of worrying about the characters' safety? What makes Asterix and his villagers funny in Asterix: The Mansions of the Gods? Does the fact that they like to fight make them scary or funny? Asterix is a Belgian-French character. Do you think kids all over the world find the same things funny? 2014 French film Asterix: The Mansions of the Gods Theatrical release poster Directed by Louis Clichy Written by Alexandre Astier Based on the Mansions of the Gods by René Goscinny and Albert Uderzo Produced by Philippe Bony Thomas Valentin Starring Jack Whitehall Nick Frost Greg Davies Matt Berry Catherine Tate Harry Enfield Richard McCourt Dominic Wood Jim Broadbent Edited by Soline Guyonneau Music by Philippe Rombi Production companies M6 Films Belvision Grid Animation Distributed by SND Groupe M6 Release date 26 November 2014 (2014-11-26) (France) Running time 85 minutes Country France Language French Budget €31 million [1] Box office $51.3 million [2] Asterix: The Mansions of the Gods (French: Astérix - Le Domaine des Dieux), also titled Asterix and Obelix: Mansion of the Gods, is a 2014 French 3D computer-animated adventure family comedy film directed by Louis Clichy with a story written and co-directed by Alexandre Astier. Asterix: The Land of the Gods was released on DVD, VOD and Blu-ray on 9 June 2015, by M6 Vidéo. Plot Frustrated with the ongoing rebellion of the Gauls, Julius Caesar devises a new scheme to conquer them: the construction of a city of luxury apartments dubbed "The Mansions of the Gods" in the forest near the Gauls' village as a means to absorb them into Roman civilization. During a boar hunt, Asterix and Obelix discover the Mansions' construction site. Project leader and architect Squaronthepotenus and the Roman legion commanded by Centurion Somniferus order slaves to deforest the surrounding area. Asterix and Obelix attempt to counteract the Romans' efforts using magic acorns from Getafix the druid, which instantly sprout into full trees upon planting. Upon hearing the frustrated Squaronthepotenus threatening to work the slaves to death, Asterix and Obelix invade the Roman camp to free the slaves and provide them with the Gauls' magic potion as a means to escape. This backfires however when the slaves instead use it to rapidly advance construction, as well as barter for the same pay as the legionaries, along with their freedom and apartments for each of them upon completion. The legionaries also go on strike for similar reasons upon hearing about it. The Gauls prepares to attack and demolish the Mansions, but discover it to already be populated by Roman civilians. Realizing that they cannot harm the civilians, they return to the village to plan how to make them leave. Meanwhile, Anonymus, Dulcia and Mischiefus, a family from Rome, are denied their apartments given to them in a lottery due to lacking documents. Upon encountering and befriending Obelix and Dogmatix in the forest, the Gauls reluctantly agree to temporarily accommodate the Roman family Asterix, Obelix and Getafix try numerous methods to make the civilians leave, from causing heavy rain and noise pollution, to trying to create a noxious stench, only for these to backfire by the civilians embracing these as a natural part of life in Brittany. The Roman civilians also begin shopping in the village, causing an escalating price war over fish and 'antique' weaponry. Asterix, appalled with what the village has become, leaves with Obelix, Getafix, Dogmatix and Cacofonix to get their own apartment at the Mansions. While Squaronthepotenus is reluctant to allow their stay, Senator Prospectus allows them to stay as part of Caesar's plan. Caesar then enacts the next phase of the plan by offering free apartments to the Gauls. In another attempt to make the Roman civilians leave, Asterix has Cacofonix to sing deafeningly loud outside the mansions. This almost works until the rest of the Gauls shows up to silence Cacofonix and move into their new apartments. Caesar begins the final part of his plan, razing the village. The legion, however refuses to cooperate with Getafix and Obelix still at large. Getafix, Mischiefus and Dogmatix are captured and held in the Mansions' reception, while Obelix faints from hunger next to the Roman legion while searching for the three, and is thrown into a chamber beneath the Mansions. Asterix awakens the next day to find the village being besieged, and the Gauls are brought along to watch the village's destruction. The Gauls keep the Romans at bay by pretending to still possess the magic potion, while Asterix makes his way to the Mansions. Meeting with Anonymus and Dulcia, they are able to free Getafix, Dogmatix, and Mischiefus and escaping into the apartments. Getafix brews the magic potion from ingredients in each of the rooms. The Gauls chase the Romans back to the Mansions, only to be captured once the Romans realise their deception. Asterix attempts to rescue them, but ends up in a poor condition from consuming an incomplete magic potion. Caesar and Prospectus arrive to declare victory over the Gauls, until Obelix rises from underground, revived after consuming food from an arrival banquet disposed into his chamber. The Gauls get their magic potion and defeat the Romans in battle, and demand Caesar take the civilians to head back to Rome, finally leading to the demolition of the Mansions of the Gods. In tradition, the Gauls celebrate their victory with a banquet atop the ruins of the mansions. Back in Rome, Anonymus and Mischiefus get even on Caesar by throwing one of Getafix's acorns into his podium at the Colosseum, leaving him dangling from a tree branch.
