Stunt double earnings can fluctuate significantly depending on production type, experience level, and location. According to SAG, the average daily rate ranges from $600 to $1,200, but rates can dip as low as $300 for smaller projects or soar up to $5,000 for big-budget films. In film, stunt doubles can earn between $3,000 and $50,000 per week, depending on stunt complexity and production budget. TV productions typically pay less, with daily rates ranging from $300 to $1,500. Theater productions offer a flat fee per performance, usually between $500 and $2,000. Experience also plays a crucial role in determining stunt double salaries. Breakdowns of average daily rates by experience level show: * Entry-level: $300-$600 * Experienced: $600-$1,200 * Seasoned: $1,200-$2,500 * Top-tier: $2,500-$5,000 Stunt doubles can also earn additional income through per diem, travel expenses, merchandise sales, and teaching. Having experience in the industry will lead to higher earnings for stunt doubles. Building connections with other stunt performers, directors, and producers can open up more job opportunities. Being adaptable is also key: being willing to work on different types of productions and days of the week will increase your chances of getting hired. Specializing in a particular type of stunt, such as fight choreography or driving, can boost earning potential. By following these tips and considering factors that affect stunt salaries, you can build a successful career in this exciting field. In the entertainment industry, stunt performers can boost their earning potential by expanding their professional networks, continually upgrading their skills, and joining relevant unions. Understanding the factors that influence stunt salaries - such as experience, demand, production budget, and location - is crucial for success. By developing a specialty, stunt performers can increase their pay and have a fulfilling career. Meanwhile, other professionals in film, TV, and live events earn varying daily rates, flat fees, or base salaries plus performance bonuses.
